ITALY GETS FIUME GOES TO JUGOSLAVS Record Year for Tribe Reported

Definite Frontier Drawn Between Two States - Called a Workable Proposition

Rome Government's Hostility Toward the Little Entente Is Now Likely to Cease

By CRAWFURD PRICE By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, Jan. 14—The amicable settlement of the Flume controversy between Italy and Jugoslavia-reprebetween Italy and Jugoslavia represents a political event of capital importance, both in its local effect and its widespread implications. By mutual consent, instead of an arbitrary decision, a definite frontier between the two states has now been drawn, and while Italy obtains sovereign possession of the coveted city of Flume, Jugoslavia receives the delta and Porto Baros, and thus at worst obtains com-Baros, and thus at worst obtains com-mercial facilities on the Adriatic supe-rior to those secured at Saloniki on the Ægean.

The result is an almost complete reversal of President Wilson's famous. proposals, and in many respects rep-resents on paper an unsatisfactory-compromise. But in actual practice it ought to prove a workable proposi-tion, and the situation being what it is no doubt more has been gained than lost on both sides. Certainly the Italians will have a great inducement to provide the Jugoslavs with every facility in Fiume itself, for the life of the city depends on Jugoslav commerce, and any obstructionist tactics will mercly hasten the independent development of Porto Baros.

Complementary States

While it is satisfactory to record the disappearance of the threatened cause of local friction, possibly the germ of war itself, the international significance of the agreement stands out in bold relief. Economically Italy and Jugoslavia represent two essentially complementary states, one principally a manufacturing country, the other mainly agricultural. A mutual interchange of commodities—assisting the process of economic restoration over the whole of southeastern Europe, is thus clearly indicated and the general treaty pending, the conclusion of which has already been announced, While it is satisfactory to record the

the whole of southeastern Europe, is thus clearly indicated and the general treaty pending, the conclusion of which has already been abnounced, becomes a natural corollary.

Politically, the effect is even more widespread. The chronic local unrest subsides and presumably Italy's hostility toward the Little Entente, together with its passive encouragement of Hungarian and Bulgarian pretensions, will henceforth cease. Furthermore an Italo-Jugoslav combination, supported by the Little Entente, introduces a new factor into the international game of diplomacy and provides an effective check to that tendency of French policy, which seeks to make the central European tendency of French policy, which seeks to make the central European states satraps in its ambitions.

Dependence on France Hitherto the governments at Belgrade. Bucharest and Prague, while disliking absolute dependence upon France have, owing to the absence of any British lead, accepted it as the only alternative. Henceforth their policy may pivot as much on Rome as on and in the light of certain conceivable developments it is easy to conceive London standing behind the

Czecho-French Treaty Calls for Explanation Is View Held in England

By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, Jan. 14-Dr. Benes, the Csech Foreign Secretary, will see Ramsay Macdenald during his visit to impression brought about by the agreement between the Czechs and the French. He is much surprised by the bad impression this treaty had in Great Britain and is anxious to dispel the idea that he is lending himself in any way to a central European bloc.

under the hegemony of France.

But what British diplomacy will want to know is not whether there is want to know is not whether there is any secret military convention in the treaty but why, if Dr. Benes is so anxious to avoid all the appearance of abetting French policy, the Czecho military staff should remain under the control of a French general, and there should be so many Prench of-ncers in high command in Prague. Moreover the Czech armament works would also appear to be under French direction.

The British view is that the joint arrangement to uphold the existing treaties and frontiers is, in the nature of things, a milkary alliance which would appear directed at Germany and Hungary. If Dr. Benes replies that tions, political Europe must remain some time in a state of flux, but this very fact invests the settlement of Italo-Jugoslav differences and the greater freedom of action thereby accorded the Little Entents with vastles.

SAN FRANCISCO, Calit. Jan. 14—
Oriental encroachment in California, figured in the Japanese cropping configured in the Japanese cropping contracts, must cease immediately. The Japanese and Hindus must take day labor or get out. Neither rejuctance on the part of the Asiatics to accept the letter and intent of the law, resourcefulness of their counsels to devise means of further evading it, nor the pleas of white landlords that the enforced exedus will ruin land values are "within the law."

Law enforcement strict and un-equivocal, tempered only by particu-lar exigencies of quickly maturing crops nearly ready to harvest, is the dictum of 49 district attorneys in an agreement reached in Saturday's ses-sion presided over by Illysses S. Rie de Janeiro (P)—The buying and selling of antiques, which came into existence as a regular business in this city during the recent Centennial Exposition, has become one of the most important branches of retail trade. Blackened and dented silver, massive and ugiy jewelry, furniture, musty pictures and quantities of nondescript articles are being sold at wondrous prices merely because they bear crest, monogram, of signature of some of the nobility of the erstwhile Brazilian empife.

Washington—A canvass made by the board of temperance prohibition and morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church to determine the religious affiliations of senators and representatives of this Congress definitely established that 78 of 96 semators and 373 of the 434 representatives are members of some church. Jersey City, N. J.—Jersey City's motion picture and vaudeville theaters, for the first time in more than a year, were open for Sunday performances. The 17 theaters were crowded, it was re-ported by their managers. In most of the churches of the city opposition to Sunday shows was expressed from the pulpit. The theaters were closed on Sunday more than a year ago when ministers protested against them.

The world cannot live together half drunk and half above, said Bishop William Frager McDowell of Washington, who made the address of welcome. Disregard the Okahara case. A contract is either valid or it is not, when written. The California Alien Land Act of 1913 makes every contract subsequently drawn between ineligible aliens and whites invalid. They were illegal when drawn, and responsibility rests with the contractors. The state Supreme Court did not validate them. Enforce the law, therefore, on that premise and have no fear of consequences.

The testimony of the district attorneys on dispersion of Japanese throughout the State is impressive, illuminating. In Imperial County 50 per cent of the farms are being worked per cent of the farms are being worked by ineligible aliens, it was stated, and only 20 per cent of the land is owned by those actually farming it. ## DOUBLE TAXATION HANDICAPS EXPORTERS, SAYS MR. WOLFE

Official Points to Negotiations With Spain to Grant Privileged Treatment to American Firms—Credits Discussed

American citisens doing business in other countries are subject—once in the United States and once in the other country—to double taxation, according to Archibald J. Wolfe, chief of the division of Commercia Laws of the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, who has just completed a four-months intensive study of the taxation situation in Europe. Mr. Wolfe arrived here today from Washington, having returned from Europe three weeks ago. He visited England, France, Belgium, Switzerland and Italy, conferring with taxation officials of those governments and commercial lawyers. He said:

It is a recognized fact that to build up foreign commerce, American firms must establish agencies in other countries. Representatives who take up residences abroad in connection with these agencies have to pay taxes to the United States as citizens thereof, and to the government of the country where they are located as residents. The same applies to firms, This double taxation is a handicap to concerns doing business in competition with other nations.

Negotiations are now going on in Spain, regarding the granting to American firms doing business there, of the most privileged treatment possible, such as is granted to England. The new Spanish tax law grants certain privileges on the basis of reciprocity. In the United States, this matter is a state question rather than a federal one, and therefore the United States cannot include in any treaty, an arrangements are being perfected, however, along other lines that will amount to practically the same thing.

New England May Benefit

New England firms are particularly interested in trade with Spain, and will receive benefit from these priv-ileges, especially leather firms, ma-chinery makers, safety razor prochinery makers, safety rapor producers, etc.

One of the important achievements of the Department of Commerce in creating the division of commercial laws in the summer of 1921 was a distinct improvement in facilities for the collection of overdue accounts in foreign countries. Formerly, with the exception of a few important capitals, American manufacturers and exporters were entirely at sea when their foreign customers, either through unfortunate circumstances or through thad faith, failed to honor their obligations.

Dean Lord, in announcing the opening of the forum, said:

opening of the forum, said:

New England relies upon transportation, and especially upon railroad transportation, for her very existence. Food, shelter, clothing, and the equipment of domestic and of business life must in large measure be brought to us from elsewhere. Likewise, we ourselves are constantly needing passenger service, ready means of access, to every part of the New England states, to say nothing of the regions that lie beyond. For these reasons alone we should all be taking part in understanding, dis-

A careful list of law firms throughout the world has been complied, with the particular end in view of helping American credit grantors in liquidating their outstanding obligations. American law firms have been encouraged and assisted to form satisfactory legal connections abroad. The field men of the bureau and the consular corps have co-operated in helping American business men in literally thousands of cases of this character where satisfactory collection methods were lacking.

The situation in the matter of collections has vastly improved. A large proportion of Cuban accounts dating from the panic of 1921 has been gradually cleared up. Even in Colombia, where conditions were almost as had as in Cuba, and in Ecuador, where exchange difficulties prevented the purchase of drafts in payment of goods bought abroad, there is an improvement. Collections are reported as in a more satisfactory state practically in all Latin American republics.

The Europe Grance and the other

Credit Situation

tically in all Latin American republics.

In Europe, Greece and the other Balkan states, as well as the newer countries of Eastern Europe (with the exception of Czechoslovakia), offer a poor field for unsecured credit transactions. The British dominions are in good shape from the point of view of regular credit merchandising transactions with old established houses. In the Far East, the political situation in China urges a little extra caution in credit dealings, and in Japan there is every prospect that the houses which have weathered the earthquake effects will continue to be desirable customers.

American manufacturers sometime imagine that they have taken every precaution to escape the risk of credit. They may ship goods to Venezuela, Colombia or the Dominican republic, and send instructions to a well-reputed bank not to allow the goods to be turned over excepting against the payment of drafts accompanying same. But in these countries there is a law according to which goods shipped under such circumstances become the property of the customer. That is, in an ordinary, fale, the customer becomes the owner of the goods, and the seller has a claim upon him for payment. This has led to disastrous losses. The Division of Commercial Laws is now working out a plan for driving the bandits of foreign trade out of business. The abuse of credit in foreign countries will stop if American credit grantors resort to self-help.

Everything indicates a heavy tide of travel to-Great Britain and Continential Europe. From all points of the. United States, passenger and tourist men are sending reports of increased business and, naturally this will mean greater passenger shipping business for the port of Boston, for we are to get our full share of this business and more.

Attractions abroad this summer include a big publicity and advestising men's convention with about 5000 delegates present from all over the world. The Pilgrim Publicity Association of Boston and the other advertising clubs of New England will send a party of from 300 to 500 delegates, who will sail from Boston on the Samaria July 5. Then there is the World Sunday School convention to she held in Glasgow June 18 to 28; Eucharistic Congress in Amsterdam July 22 to 28; Banker's convention in London in July; Epworth League Pilgrimage to Epworth, Eng., during July and August.

The British Empire Exhibition to be held in London from April to October is exnected to draw thousands of residents of this country. Aside from various athletic games, there is the World Power Conference at Webley Park, London, from June 30 to July 12. These are only a few of the things that are going on in Europe this summer which will add to the regular tourist travel.

It is coming more and more to be a recognized fact that the Sonday afternoon programs of the Boston Flute Players' Club offer good musical entertainment to this town. They cover a considerable range in their makeup; for instance, from the Bloch sonats of a few weeks ago to the conservative program of yesterday (even if it did include the Ravel sonatine) is somewhat of a jump for a listener to accomplish. Nevertheless, this organization is doing praise-worthy work in setting forth worth while music, not so much for the benefit of the students as for the enjoyment of those persons who like to hear good music well rendered

The early Beethoven quartet (op. 18, number 4) at the opening of the program, established a mood and formed a suitable prelude to the archale dance music of Arthur Foote. The Ravel sonatine, though it is classed as "modard of conservatism set by the rest of the program. Its progressions are based on the whole-tone scale, but it takes much more than this to attract attention these days."

STATE GETS MORE ON INHERITANCE TAX

Over $6,000,000 Estimated for 1923-Statistics Show Steady Increase Since 1908

this year to the amount of between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000 from the taxes to be raised on estates under the present inheritance tax law, which first went into operation in 1908. Returns from the inheritance tax in Massachusetts have increased slowly

The amount of the taxes assessed and raised upon the estates of non-residents of Massachusetts during the last year was $323,150.14, and this was isst year was $223,150.14, and this was substantially squal to the amount assessed upon foreign estates during the previous year. For instance, the Frick estate at Beverly Farms is assessed at about $750,000; but what the State secures from it in the way of inheritance tax, or indeed the amount of the inheritance tax on any Massachusetta estate, the state officials are not permitted to make public. The rate of the inheritance tax in

The rate of the inheritance tax in Massachusetts varies, and it depends to a large extent upon the relationship of the decedent to the legates, devisee or beneficiary. There are also various classes in relationship which affect directly the rate the beneficiary must pay the Commonwealth for this right to inherit which the Supreme Judicial Court has adjudged to be a commodity, and, hence, taxable.

For instance, the rate is 1 per cent on $10,000 and up to $25,000; 2 per cent on any amount of money or income from property from $25,000 to $50,000; 4 per cent on $50,000 and up to $250,000; 5 per cent from $250,000 to $500,000, and 5½ per cent from $500,000 to $750,000 and thereon.

In speaking of the operation of the inheritance tax in Massachusetts Henry F. Long, commissioner of cor-porations and taxation, said today to a representative of The Christian Science Monitor:

The amount of revenue which the Commonwealth has derived from the legacy and succession tax during the last year exceeds the amount which this tax has yielded during the largest previous year by about 1300,000. The total amount of inheritance tax collected by the treasurer and recollected by the treasurer and re-ceiver-general during the year ending Nov. 30, 1921, was about 500,000 more than the total amount collected dur-ing the last year.

Of the amount collected in 1921, however, $900,387.51 was an extra tax, assessed and collected under the General Acts of 1919, to be added to the military and naval service fund of 1919. Of the amount collected in 1922, $81,095.66 was collected under the act of 1919, and applied to the military and naval service fund of that year.

military and naval service fund of that year.

The normal inheritance tax, therefore, collected during the last year for general purposes of the Commonwealth, was larger than the amount collected during the previous year. Some further assessments and collections will be made under the act of 1919 I have referred to; but the amounts to be collected in the future under this act will be very small, as in most estates to which this act applied the tax has been paid in full.

In 1908, the tax from inheritance through succession or legacy, was $357,529.46; in 1910 it was $1,467,668, and in 1922 the tax was $6,805,977.44.

FEDERAL ACT AGAINST PASSES FOR RAILROAD EMPLOYEES FAVORED

MANCHESTER, N. H., Jan. 14 (Special)—In granting the Boston and Maine Railroad authority to immediately increase its fare on commutation and pupils' tickets 20 per cent, the New Hampshire Public Service Commission has once more called for re-form in the free pass system on rail-roads. But it recommends concerted action' throughout the country, the opinion of the commission being:

opinion of the commission being:

The evil is so deep seated that no one state and certainly no one railroad can overthrow it. To accomplish its overthrow requires concerted action on the part of Congress and the states. Without such legislation the railroads will not be disposed to hazard the labor troubles slikely to come from taking this privilege away from their employees: it would be poor judgment for the Boston & Maine Railroad to undertake it alone.

For the reasons thus set forth, the ommission did not consider the em-loyees' pass in reaching a decision as

The Greatest Wanamaker February Furniture Sale

Opens' Tuesday, January 15

In 1923 we opened the February Furniture Sale in January, because the number of people going into new homes was greater than ever before, and because their demands for new furniture at February Sale prices could not be adequately met in one short month. And our foresight was justified.

This year has been even greater in building operations. Nor is the end yet in sight. More and more people are furnishing new homes and apartments. More and more people are calling for new furniture. And so the sale opens this year in January. It will be

COMMUNITY CHEST FOR CITY OPPOSED

Chamber of Commerce Committee, Following Complaints, Postpones Recommendations

Much epposition to the community chest method of financing Boston's charitable work has been registered with the committee on charity finance of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, which has been continuously sngaged for months in the study of this question. This committee, while it has examined and collected many data, does not feel that it has covered the ground yet and announces it will make a recommendation later.
Some of the principal objections to the community chest are that it is virtually a violation of the fundamen-tals of religious liberty in that it compels a donor to give to the sup-port of agencies established and con-trolled by religious bodies with whose aims he may not be in sympathy.

Religious Animosity Engendered The amount allowed by the chest committee in some cities for hospitals, orphanages, and other agencies belonging to one of the great religious bodies is by many considered to be proportionately far in excess of the amounts allowed for similar agencies controlled by other religious bodies.

This has resulted in religious animosity. Those who are opposing the chest on these grounds insist that sectarian agencies should be financed by their respective followers, and their support should not be forced on the general public general public.

Others feel that this plan of federated finance eliminates personal de-votion, making charity a machine. This view has been shared widely by the Salvation Army and the Y. M. C. A both of which organizations recognize the value of intimate relationships

"Penalty on the Strong"

There is another class of objectors who see the community chest method in the light of a penalty on the strong and successful societies in that it in terfores with their initiative and by capitalizing their good name and re ord of efficiency to the advantage inefficient organizations, thus enabling these less worthy agencies to be financed and perpetuated through the successful record of the strong and thoroughly tested organizations in-stead of requiring each to justify its own existence to exist.

That it might become a monopoly and its executive committee become a super-governing board body and might become a handicap to the growth of worth while agencies is another objection raised.

MANY LEGISLATORS
FOR FARE INQUIRY

Members of General Courts Believe Utilities Report Is Subject to Review

Many members of the Massachusetts Legislature declared today for a legislative review of the decision of the Department of Public Utilities where by the railroads entering Boston were allowed to raise gates, 20 per cent. The legislators who would discuss the subject were generally agreed that the acts of the Department of Public Utilities, which was created by and with the consent of the General Court, are subject, to review by the law-makers of the Commonwealth.

Several of the legislators agreed with William I. Hennessy, Senator of Public agreement of the legislators agreed with William I. Hennessy, Senator of What Public a greater share of what belongs to the targyers.

with the consent of the General Court, are subject to review by the law-makers of the Commonwealth.

Several of the legislators agreed with William I. Coleman E. Kelly, a representative of Dorchester, for example said today: I would like to go through with this right of the Department of public Utilities to act sa a judical tribunal, rather than the representatives of the people in this very matter of railroad rates, but what good will it do if the people will not help their representatives fight their battles?

I feel that this in an outrage, but I have fried several times to put through bills for the people, as for instance my effort to get a 5-cant fane on certain Dorchester lines, but I could get but 65 signatures for such a petition and I had to quit. If the people want to control this utilities department, they can if they stand right behind their representatives, and keep standing behind them, and not let it be a 10-day indignation wave and then forgotten. That's one reason why so, many injustices are perpetrated against the people. They will not continue steadfast for their rights. Some of the legislators remark the fact that the department of public utilities is not a judicial tribunal as some of its members have held it to be, but that it is a department created by the Legislature to sit for the people and to regulate public utilities and their service and charges to the public. These men say that the department commissioners are not judges, and that after the railroads with their armies of skilled corporation attorneys, their traffic experts and their operating engineers and managers had finished with the case in presenting their petitions for 20 per cent increases in fares that had already been increased twice within comparatively few years, the commis-sioners of the department controlling the operation of public utilities, should of Prof. Bailey, Also of Harvard, have made a study for the people the justice and necessity for the railhastily organize for opposition to rate

The United States should reduce affied debts just in proportion as Allies take steps toward disarmament. abolish conscription of subject peo-ples, and are willing to make proper concessions as to their policies, Mrs. Mead maintained. The details were

"All students of economics now recognize that Germany can never pay anything more in the way of reparations until it is allowed to buy raw material for manufacture after buying food for her superfluous 15. 000,000 people and by having a sur-plus of exports over imports," Mrs. Mead said, adding:

President Coolidge's campaign for the MAYOR-PROFESSOR TO BUILD SCHOOLS

Northampton's New Executive Finds Public Sentiment Favors Improvements

MEETING OPPOSITION

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Jan. 14 (Special)—Promotion of greater school facilities, which have received insufficient attention since the opening of the late war, is declared by Edward J. Woodhouse, new mayor of Northampton and associate professor of government at Smith College, to be an important local issue throughout Massachusetts at the present time.

"The school situation in Northampton," said Mayor-Professor Woodhouse, in discussing conditions with a representative of The Christian Schence Monitor, "is characterized by the eager attitude of the citizens to meet all needs, even with the prospect of increased taxes. The problem lies in the fact that no building had been done until about eight or 10 years done until about eight or 10 years ago and that this beginning was interrupted by the war; that we have, in some cases, to deal with communities in which there are one-room schoolhouses of the type of 20 to 50 years ago." idea.

It was stated that Tewksbury was too far removed from Lowell to be attracted by the proposition and receive any benefits from it, and there are no thickly settled portions in Tewksbury. There has been no annexation talk in Tewksbury since 1906, when Wigginville became a part of Lowell.

schoolhouses of the type of 20 to 50 years ago."

The Mayor said that on all sides he is meeting with co-operation from the citizens, who are, for the most part, aware of the situation, anxious to have the best possible facilities for education and to take the steps necessary to attain them. "I have not been well acquainted with school conditions in many other places," he declared, "and do not know whether this attitude is universal, but it is most encouraging and is as it ought to be."

Continuing the Mayor said: DEMOCRACY IS MADE SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Jan. 14 (Speclai)—"Property that has no part in industry but to draw an income must be subordinated, and the human ele-

Our plans for the very near future center around the inheritance left to us by the 1923 administration, plans for a $300,000 structure of 11 class-rooms, and a fully equipped gymnasium. It will be built on the same grounds and used in connection with the high school and the Hawley Grammar School. This will not mean increase in the teaching staff for several years at least, until we have two sessions instead of one, a lunchroom is added, and a course in physical culture is inaugurated.

have not been passed upon by the City Government, Mayor Woodhouse does not contemplate any opposition, since, even with the prospect of increased taxes and a bond issue, public epinion is overwhelmingly in favor of school improvements. He also finds a favorable and intelligent attitude toward the bill to be brought before the State Legislature this year, whereby the age for compulsory education be raised from 14 to 18.

"That is what we have been wanting," is the verdict of the working then to whom I have talked, said the Mayor. # EDUCATIONAL

Advanced Courses, Formulae and True Education in Secondary Schools

London, England
Special Correspondence
OME seven years ago the Board of school-life in the grant-earning schools. Casting about for a remedy it devised the system of "advanced courses." The idea, in theory excel-courses." The idea, in theory excellent, was roughly as follows:

As many pupils as possible who had already gained the school's certificate were to be tempted to stay on some two years longer by the prospect of a sort of intensive training in a group of subjects more or less closely allied. One group was to consist of natural science and mathematics, another of modern subjects, e.g., one
"living" language linked with modern history, another of the study of the "classical" civilizations. A certain minimum of pupils, never exactly de-"classical" civilizations. A certain minimum of pupils, never exactly defined but roughly not less than eight, was insisted on for each course. An examination was, naturally, to crown the two years, and a certificate to be awarded to the successful. Without awarded to the successful. Without examinations and certificate it is to be assumed that no pupil will work profitably. For each "advanced course" a grant of £400 a year was offered to the scheols. A large school might take three of the courses, a small called the courses, as a supply school to the courses. might take three of the courses, as small school had to be content with one. Such was the scheme, and though some enlightened critics saw its dangers at once, on the whole it was

least, of their intellectual training. But, as had been too often the case in the history of state education in England, the gift of the board proved to be no gift at all to thools where it was most.

The disastrous method of wident, for the weak point about all formula is that boys and girls are not educated that way. Far otherwise! Education comes from the impact of educated mind on mind, not from for-mulæ or systems. Let us see how this particular formula has worked In the large schools there was n difficulty.

difficulty. The requirements were readily met. They probably had al-ready a sufficiency of well-qualified teachers and more than an adequate supply of properly qualified pupils. So they accepted the bribe and went on their way rejoicing.

But what of the smaller schools ling under adverse conditions had wilt up a sixth form, small no doubt gling under adverse conditions had make her happy.

"I am glad I brought this paper ribbon. I felt sure we could find some sood quality. And it is a well-known use for it here," remarked the woman as the transfer to the universities have come from the universities have come from the "It is just the thing for the fourth". smaller schools, particularly in Scot-land. The very freedom such pupils enjoy because the schools have not enough staff to devote much time to

The Small Schools

Now it is obviously to such schools vanced course, if the system were liberally interpreted, would be of the the big schools. And indeed it is a blue one? Right each time. matter of common knowledge that the "idea" was devised very largely for borothy. Who can show me one-such schools. But mark what hap-fourth of a green ribbon? Fine. Now the scheme were followed. Obviously such schools could only qualify for one course. "Well," said the board, "let them choose that one for which they are most fitted." This seems right and easy—by formula. But in practice such schools in their expractice such schools in their exmatriculation students have as great a variety as the bigger schools. "A," for instance, a big school, has, say 50 such students. Out of that number it can easily provide enough for three courses—eight to 10, at least, for each. But "B," a small school, can muster but 12, and among those 12 there will be found at least three "groups" if not more. Consequently one of two things must happen. A large majority of the qualified pupils may be driven along the narrow path of "one course" in order that the school may qualify for the much needed £400. But such a proceeding is educationally immoral. It lies right across the track of light. No pupil can be "educated" in subjects which he dislikes or for which he is temperamenikes or for which he is temperamentally unfitted. Moréover, each particular bundle of subjects was tied up with a liberal amount of red-tape difficult often to unfasten.

Blessed by Right Decision

The result, therefore, was that the small school had to decline the bribe or act against the true fundamentals of education. And blessed were those even in their poverty who chose the former course. To do justice to the board they saw this difficulty. And the way out was to transfer promisthe way out was to transfer promis-ing pupils in such a school to that school which had the advanced course best fitted for them. We note the reign of formulæ again! Had the authors of such an expedient reflected a moment they would have seen the formidable lions in the path—difficulformidable itons in the path—difficul-ties of distance, of expense, not to apeak of the very pride and spirit of the school which was thus to be de-prived of its ablest pupils when most likely to be of value. And this re-luctance to part is not, as some have argued, a sign of selfishness and narrow-mindedness altogether. Each school has or ought to have a proper

I called in at a primary school re cently. "This bottle contains and brass filings mixed; please arate them." "This tap runs. Please put it right." These and a number of other prac-tical problems based upon the science of common life were being solved by a class of 20 boys working in couples. The room was fitted with tables and equipped with simple scientific apparatus. A hum of activity pervaded the atmosphere: the vere engrossed in their several tasks and each was eagerly discussing with his partner the best method of solving the particular problem in hand. And this is the kind of work which is now going on in large numbers of English primary schools. Instead of the old-time lecture, with the teacher talking and demonstrating and the pupi merely listening and quiescent, this scene of activity and discovery on the part of the pupils themselves is everywhere being enacted

Circumstances

This great change has been brought about not by educational zeal alone, though that has been a foremost factor, but also by force of circum stances. A year or two ago the Board of Education made it compulsory for all children to stay at school until the age of at least 14. Previously they had been able to leave at 13 and even at 12 in many localities. This extension of school life has made it necessary for the primary schools to adapt their teaching to the needs of boys and girls of 13 and 14 years of age. Such children will be more interested in their work if this be made the furniture. The various pieces are cut out, and each child has its when the play element is duced," smiled Mrs. Warren. "Too to satisfy two conditions. In the first often teachers are satisfied with place, it should be linked up with, and place, it should be linked up with, and arise out of, the pupils' daily life, and secondly, it should give to the pupils scope for self-activity.

These requirements have been met in a striking manner in the subject of natural science, and without much axpense either in building, equipment or apparatus. Many schools have inau-gurated two-year courses in practical science by adapting an ordinary class-room and improvising their own apparatus. In some cases, for example, the tables consist of blackboards tald across the top of the desks. Much apparatus today is actually made by the pupils themselves, and to this end the handicraft instructor works in con-

While differing in details the broad idea underlying these practical science classes is that of a series of problems to be solved. ## French in the Lower Grades

Baltimore, Md.
Special Correspondence
THE work to be done was that of teaching French to eight grades, from the primary up to those prering for high school—and on only a week.
To arrange the lessons so that one paring for high school—and on only one day a week.

To arrange the lessons so that one grade's work glided easily into the next: to make all the work interesting and yet to accomplish something ing and yet to accomplish something, really worth while required thought and preparation, but now, after several years' experience, we know it can be done for the results shown at the end of the year, as well as the rapid progress made by pupils after entering high school, have proven it. Happily the teacher had great latitude in the arranging of her own work.

The brotherhood of all nations is first thing taught as the reason studying French. Once in the d grade the word "malade" (sick) third grade the word "malade" (sick) came into the lesson, and some hesitation was evidenced about learning the word. The right thought was shown, and a little boy said, "I think we ought to learn the word because sometime we might be where there were French we might be where there were reachen people crying and saying. Je suis malade' (I am sick), and if we knew the word we could help them!"

In Grade I, after the simple daily greetings are taught, the child is given the French flag and taught to recognize it and its colors.

Then we start with our French family. Knowing a little child's love of pictures, these have been used in profusion. Large sheets of heavy profusion. Large sheets of heavy amasement, and yet as they could read manila paper, bound with white linen and write quite well in English, it tane and rings inserted in the top seemed as if that accomplishment manila paper, bound with white lines tape and rings inserted in the top were thus made into a reading chart. Many beautiful and artistic pictures from advertisements were used for this chart. The first page shows the family from grandfather down to the family family from grandfather down to the family family from grandfather down to the family family family family family family family fa baby, and almost in one lesson the tures to be pasted in occasionally to children learn these names and take illustrate the text. cyperience hard winters in their youth, remember with joy the delights of descending snow-covered hills on improvised toboggans. The nature of the countryside was such, however, that a "run" of any great distance was impossible; it was mostly a case of a few hundred feet downhill, then a drag uphill, then down again, and so on. In Switzerland there are runs of over a mile, with wonderfully banked curves, and little, exciting jumps, and everything to please and thrill the toboggan is no modern invention in Switzerland, any more than it is in Canada and the United States. The Swiss peasants have used toboggans in winter from time immemorial, and it has been termed, in modern parlance, their "taxi"!

Tobogganing as a form of sport, however, seems to have been introduced into Switzerland by that well-known English essayist, John Addington Symonds, who was a close friend of Robert Louis Stevenson, and who, having to spend a winter in the Swiss mountains conceived the idea of passing the time away by getting up toboggan races among 'the inhabitants

There are two distinct kinds of vehicles—the toboggan and the bob-sleigh, and each has its own followsleigh, and each has its own following and often its own course. There are toboggan clubs, with strictly-defined rules and regulations, and there are bobsleigh clubs, with similarly strict rules and regulations, and the use of either has become quite a fine art. The toboggan, for one or two passengers, generally used, has a two passengers, generally used, has a skeleton frame, is a foot or so in depth, has grooved runners, which depth, has grooved runners, which give it extra speed, and is raced in two positions, sitting and prone, the latter the more popular with experts: in both cases it is steered with the hands and the feet are used as brakes, special "tipped" boots sometimes being worn for the purpose.

The opportunities in Switzerland for both bobsleighing and tobogganing are legion. Every road and slope in every winter sports center, generally speaking, is fit for it. # ART NEWS AND COMMENT surprised to come upon a notice of the passing away of Theophile Alaxandre Steinlen. I was surprised because in mo American paper for that date, or since, that I have happened to see has there been any reference to an event surely of importance to everybody with the slightest interest in art. Steinlen was a great artist; for a time he was also the popular artist that the great artist often is not; and his loss is no small one to art, above all to the art of illustration.

He was identified in the beginning with a little group of four who gave French illustration distinction and were a strong influence in the Paris of the nineties, a period apt to be associated wholly with London, though it was from Paris that many of the Englishmen now so much written about derived their inspiration and their method. Certainly, the London artists and critics who had a habit of meeting early every May in Paris for the Salon were sure, before their return, to go the rounds of the Palais Royal, the Odéon and the Quais, in search of the latest illustrations and posters of Willette. Forain, Louis Le Grand and, above all, Steinlen. They held it almost as much of a sacred duty as to see the work of the painiers and sculptors in the "New" Salon, and usually more of a pleasure.

It was the Courrier Français that gave the French illustrators of the French illustrators of the French illustrators of the future is more likely to reverse than confirm the verdict of the present.

En the Courrier Français that gave the French illustrators of the future is more likely to reverse than confirm the verdict of the present.

It was the Courrier Français that gave the French illustrators of the last decade of the last century their National Traits chief chance. However it may be criticized for much of its policy, there can be only praise for the way it opened its pages to men of distinct originality who were still at the out-set of their career. As a rule, the more character the young artist puts into his work, the readier is the average editor to fight shy of it. Jules Roques, at the time editor of the it takes a country a long time to Courrier Français, encouraged character wherever he could find it. He we have had Horarth and the back was liberal enough to go abroad in its pursuit, and anyone who lived in London during the nineties and shared its artistic and literary life ably exceeds, by a handsome margin.

The Times says it was the Chat Noir that "discovered" Steinlen. As one looks back to the memorable designs, as eagerly collected as the illustrated books of the day, none stands out with greater power to tell its tale—and beauty—beauty of line and form—than Steinler's for Nestle's milk. For it was a design that did tell, which is the principal end of a poster wherever it may be hung; the treatment was appro-

London, Dec. 17
IN ENGLAND the term "arts and crafts" has a special connotation which is not shared, apparently, by the Swedish. The more ribaid among us apply the term to almost any article of domestic ornamentation or furnishing of which the price is so very much too high for the standard of workmanship that we are thus tully assured that the article is hand-made. There is no more popular, nor, at the present moment, more effective way of condemning a piece of terra-cotta colored cloth, so loosely woven as to be both draughty and transparent, than to call it "art-and-craft-y." Such has been the unfortunate result of the amatenrish efforts of those who have followed the teaching of William Morris only in order to amuse themselves, and whose chief ambition seems to be that their work should look even more hand-made, if possible, than it actually is. Even the best work is at a disadvantage from the prejudicial nature of this term, which certainly did not start life as an opprobrious label. In fact, the revived arts of hand weaving and hand dyeting in this country are being steadily strangled by being classed with products well known to be commercially "impossible."

In other words, he composes; and what he composes, Mr. Schmitz conducts.

Other men in the United States compose—hundreds of them; others conduct—thousands of them. But Mr. conduct—thousands of them. But Mr. Varèse writes music that is beyond, any question new, original and individual. He represents a style and a method that are distinct from anything hitherto known. To my mind, he stands for ideas in tone of sufficient novelty and of sufficient capacity for expression to be the basis for a school. As for Mr. Schmitz, I do not say that he is a remarkable conductor. I am merely recording that he directed one of Mr. Varèse's works for chamber-music orchestra at about half, of her composers; and the greatest authority in the world as executant, she played with all the charm imaginable as appreciator and with all the command needed as exworks for chamber-music orchestra at the Vanderbilt Theater this evening, to applause for the composer, for him-self and for his players.

Miss Farrar's Recital

Miss Geraldine Farrar, soprano, gave a recital in Town Hall on the evening of Jan. 8, with Joseph Malkin, violoncellist, and Claude Gotthelf-Gonvierre, planist, assisting. Miss Farrar was greeted enthusiastically by a large audience and was cheered and applauded before she sang a note, as loudly as on the occasion of her farewell appearance in the opera 2½ years ago. She presented as her first group of pieces some songs of the German repertory, using translated texts. It struck me as something novel to hear her sing in English, for I could recall having heard her formerly only in other languages.

Miss Lawrence strikes a deeper, more legitimate note when called upon to do serious sketches, but this does not interfere with her being a very good dancer as well, while Miss Lillie is what used to be technically called the "rough soubrette" of the organization. Although beautiful as herself, her comedy effects are produced by her grotesque make-ups and grimaces. ## COAL INDUSTRY BETTER IN RUSSIA spondence)—An improvement in the condition of the Russian coal and transport industries during the last year is indicated in official reports which have just been published on these subjects. Felix Dzershinsky, Commissar for Transportation, speaking before a conference of railway workers in Moscow, cited a list of figures to show recovery in the functioning of the railroads.

During the year from Oct. 1, 1922, to Oct. 1, 1923, the railroads carried 34.5 per cent of the pre-war amount of freight. This average rose to 35.5 per cent during the nine months of 1923. There were 290,000 cars in good repair on Oct. 1, 1933, as against 271,000 on the same date in the previous year. The average daily run of each car was 110 versts (between 70 and 75 miles), as against 80 versts in the year before.

The work done by the individual engines increased. During 1922-23, 112 engines covered the distance which required the work of 242 engines in 1921-22. The fuel reserves at the disposal of the railroad administration also increased. So on Oct. 1, 1923, the railroads were provided with wood for 135 days and with oil for 39 days. The corresponding figures in the preceding year were 38 and 21. Expenses for fuel had been cut down by 20 per cent during the last year, but the railroads are still burning proportionally 66 per cent more fuel than in 1913.

The number of railroad workers, which shrunk from 907,000 on Jan. 1, 1922, to 708,000 on Jan. 1, 1923, increased during the last year, amounting to 900,000 on Sept. 1. The pay of these workers is admittedly unsatisfactory, but it is hoped that a 50 per cent wage increase on Jan. 1 will bring the earnings of the railroad workers into line with those of the workers in the heavy industries. bring the earnings of the railroad workers into line with those of the workers in the heavy industries. #### More Coal Produced

The improvement in coal production in Russia's most important mining district, the Donetz basin, may be estimated from the following com-parative tables, which have been pub-lished recently in the newspaper, Economic Life.

Economic Lite.

In spite of these favorable figures, which show a production increase of approximately 10 per cent, the Donetz approximately 10 per cent, the Donetz basin is perpetually faced with a hard struggle. It is affected by the prevalent sales crisis, which makes it difficult to dispose of all the coal which has been mined. It is forced to meet the competition of wood and oil fuels. Still it is felt that the increase in production, which was achieved under very difficult and discouraging conditions, offers excellent promise for the tions, offers excellent promise for the future development of the industry.

The latest figures on Russian grain exports show that 1,200,000 tons of grain were sold to foreign countries by Dec. 1. Of this amount 1,000,000 tons have already been sent abroad: Germany bought 300,000 tons. Holland 150,000 France, 125,000 and the Scan 150,000, France 135,000, and the Scandinavian countries 115,000. The export reached its climax in November. when 133 ships salled loaded with grain from Russian ports. About 100 ships sailed in the three preceding months.

= The Week in Vienna =

Vienna, Dec. 24

Special Correspondence on behalf of the University of Vienna, a banker has come forward and offered to defray the whole deficit of the university. Just how much this munificent donation represents cannot be precisely estimated at present, but the amount will probably be about 25,000,000,000 crowns. In common with all the other Austrian educational institutions, Vienna University needs money very badly. All through the war there were no funds available for maintaining the library and material equipment. After the armistice, the depreciation of the crown and the consequent rise in prices made conditions still worse, and today the financial situation of the university is most deplorable. Revenues have fallen off, as the State is no longer able to continue its former large appropriations for educational purposes. The teaching staff are miserably paid, and the stipends for poor students do not yield enough for a week's board.

Signmund Bosel, who is reputed to be the wealthiest man in Austria. Selfore the war he was a clerk in a textile house in Vienna. During the war he engaged in army contracts and speedily amassed a large fortune. Later he turned his attention to bank-ing, and by the purchase of a large interest in the Union Bank, of which he is now president. Besides his bank-ing interests Herr Bosel has large holdings. In numerous industrial undertakings.

Although Vienna hotels are crowded with guests the storekeepers complain that their trade has not been particularly good. Only the provision houses, and two or three large department stores reported good business. The depression on the Bourse is held to be partly responsible for this, as investors are holding their stocks to prevent selling at a loss. After all, high prices are chiefly responsible for the bad trade. Nearly everything costs much more than a year ago, although the value of the crown remains the same.

Although Vienna hotels are crowded with elements in Vienna, the house-owners are now almost the poorest. The tenants' protection laws prevent them from raising rents, and render them quite help-less. Naturally they have no money to spend on repairs so that a great mumber of buildings are failing into a dilapidated condition and some are even in danger of collapse. So critical is the situation that the municipality has been compelled to come to the landlords' assistance by carrying out the more imperative repairs. The amounts thus expended are charged as a mortgage on the property. Nearly 1,000,000,000 crowns has already been spent on such repairs, mainly to roofs and façades and foundations.

MANY EVIDENCES OF IMPROVEMENT IN STEEL TRADE

Orders Gaining, Operations Expanding. Prices Firmer-Zinc and Lead Up

NEW YORK, Jan. 14 (Special)—Conditions in the steel industry are improving from practically every standpoint. Orders are increasing, operations are expanding, prices are firmer and in some cases rising, and that popular barometer used by Wall Street, the unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation, revealed an increase after eight successive monthly declines. Though steel leaders are outwardly yeary conservative in their predictions Though steel leaders are outwardly very conservative in their predictions for 1924, many inwardly believe that business will be as satisfactory and prosperous as in 1923.

Steel makers generally report that orders placed the first 10 days of this month were from 25 to 60 per cent greater than during the corresponding period of December. One maker canvassed his regular customers and found that less than 10 per cent are completely covered on their first quarter steel requirements.

Even the plate business, which was the most depressed in any line, is improving, eastern makers working at 40 per cent of capacity on the average and many expecting to get a share of the 13,000 tons which will be placed soon by the Pennsylvania Railroad for making into 3000 all-steel bodied freight cars.

Prices Are Firmer

Prices Are Firmer

Prices Are Firmer

There are many evidences that prices are firmer. For instance, jobbers have been distributing orders among several mills at the full market quotations, whereas if there is a weak spot they usuaffy place all their tonnage with that low priced mill.

Whereas it was a regular thing two or three weeks ago for $2 a ton concessions to be made on sheets, now the buyer is fortunate if he secures a concession of $1. A consumer of sheet bars, who boasted that he could buy at $40 a ton, was compelled to pay the full price of $42.50 to the mill to whom he had boasted.

Iron and steel scrap have been advancing again following the purchase of heavy melting steel by the Carnegie Steel Company at a price of $20 a ton delivered. Buyers are becoming convinced that the price fabric is very sound and indeed several expect advances when the expected buying wave gets into full swing. However, the larger companies will try to keep prices from advancing, as they believe that stability is the best policy in the long run.

Ingot Output Near Feak

Ingot Output Near Peak

Ingot Output Near Peak

The unfilled orders of the Steel Corporation increased 76,755 tons in December, which was a welcome surprise, predictions having named a decrease of 250,000 tons. The gain was due to three causes: The increase in orders, the renewals of contracts against which specifications had never been made and the shutdowns of plants during the holiday period for plant repairs.

There has been a steady fall of orders since March, when orders on books aggregated 7,402,332 tons to the end of November, when the total stood at 4,368,584 tons.

'A feature of the week's events was the official announcement of steel ingot production for December and hence for all of 1922 by the American Iron and Steel Institute. The year's total was 43,226,355 tons, the second largest in the history of the industry, the record having been made in 1917 with 43,619,200 tons.

The year was regarded as an 30 percentage of capacity in which the industry was engaged. Heavy production was an outstanding feature of the year, plg iron output at 40,250,000 tons having been the 'highest in history. In December ingot production declined at the rate of 6000 tons daily.

Pig Iron Quiet

Pig Iron Quiet

Pig Iron Quiet

The growth of the industry is realized when it is considered that in 1898 ingot output was 8,800,920 tons. By 1912 it had increased to 30,284,662 tons. Thus in 25 years it has multiplied itself five times.

Pig iron is the quietest iron and steel commodity. Many melters of iron age still taking inventory and have no time to consider purchases. There are a few inquiries for about 1000 tons each in both east and west. In the absence of sales the market is untested, but it is believed that prices are basically sound, that prices are basically sound, believed that prices are basically sound, with $22 prevailing in eastern Pennsylvania and $22 to $23 at Buffalo.

A recent development has been liberal offers of foreign iron to Americans, but prices are usually $1 at on higher than domestic iron by the time the iros is delivered at consumers yards. The foreign material is chiefly of French make, the French having reduced prices during the last few weeks because of a freer supply of Ruhr coke. This cheap French iron has been felt keenly by the British makers. It can be landed at Boston at $25 a ton, duty paid.

two additional newsprint machines and the completion of the deal for timber limits from the Union Bag & Paper bushel does not keep out Canadian wheat is evident from the fact that exports to the United States during December were 5,130,000 bushels, as compared with 3,089,000 for December, 1922. During the four months ended December they were 17,734,000 bushels, as compared with 9,486,000 for the corresponding period in 1923.

Flour exports fell off somewhat during December, were only 1,390,242 barries as compared with 1,462,000 in December, 1922. The United Kingdom bought 112,000 barrels less, the United States 32,000 less, but other countries 72,000 barrels mere.

English capital attracted

English capital is being attracted in Canadian milling and elevator enterprises, it being announced that British milling interests are prepared to advance 56,000,000 to finish the partially built plant of the Aberta Flour Mills, Ltd., at Calgary. Another announcement has it that the Spillers of London

GENERAL-DECLINE IN QUIET LONDON MARKET THIS WEEK

By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, Jan. 14—While trading has been light and issues on the whole have sought lower levels, there has been no real slump, as was feared when the Labor Party came into power. The members early last week has created a better feeling in the markets, and support was offered in certain issues.

The oils were well bought, and Brazilian bonds were in demand, fellowing improvement in the exchange of that country. Gilt-edged issues were firm most of the week.

Following are Friday's closing quotations of a selected list, together with not changes from a week ago:

LONDON, Jan. 14—There was pro-nounced depression in the exchange markets today, with pound sterling dropping to $4.28 1-16, a new low since 1922.

Efforts of French financiers over the week-end to arrest the decline of the franc proved unavalling. The franc tumbled to a new low at 92.60 to the pound or 21.60 to the dollar, 40 centimes lower than Saturday. Near panic conditions were reported on the Paris Bourse as the franc continued to fall, touching 22.75 to the dollar before the close.

BRILLIANT GAME WON BY TORONTO

Hockey Sextet Defeats McGill in First Canadian Collegiate Contest, 8 to 1

MONTREAL Que, Jan. 14 (Special)

-University of Toronto, intercollegiate ockey champions for the last four ears, made an impressive start in the sening game of the present season aturday night when they defeated ledill University 8 goals to 1 and in oing so displayed more speed, teamork and all-round hockey ability than my amateur team that has played here noe the war.

the start was maintained until the Judson and Wright were the stars of game. They were well matched in ed. and, while they only scored one id each, they threat the locals by the pace they maintained. They both wed great stickhandling and teamed it together. Grey, Westman and xton were well up the standard of other pair of forwards, and in the period the latter pair accounted for five goals scored by the winners, ris and McLeod were good on the ensitye, and the fact that the locals red only one goal was due to Thomp's work in goal as mutch as to Mc-l's weak shooting and the backcheck of the Toronto forwards. McGerleand Dempsey were the best for the ers, while Dineen showed flashes of did-time form, but he was not in dittion after a year's absence. The many:

16 against it and only 12 more minutes to play, Washington began a swift attack which netted it enough points for a victory. Missouri led at the end of the first half by 13 to 12.

The outstanding feature of the game was the brilliant playing of Capt. J. L. Minner 25. who scored 7 field goals and a free, throw, making 15 points for Washington. He was involved in practically every scoring play of the game, R. H. Seago 26, also starred for Washington. The noteworthy part of the Missouri game was its five-man defense which effectively held Washington during the first half. F. H. Wheat 25, and L. G. Buchner 26, starred for Missouri. The summary:

of fuel consumption are both of grent and evident value to the operator of aircraft.

Where a record is of no use, it will quickly be lost from sight. The best example is furnished by the trials for glider duration, which finally led to a flight lasting eight hours. That particular sort of effort has now been dropped, however, as it has become evident that it had no significance in the improvement of aircraft or in their future use. Record breaking, like many other things desirable in themselves, can easily be overdone. Its importance must not be underestimated, but neither must it be allowed to overshadow the putting to practical use of information aiready gained. So long as trials for new figures remain in the hands of the manufacturer, however, there is little danger of any such overshadowing, for the manufacturer must follow up the quest for records by a quest for sales, thus utilizing to the fullest and at once the advertising value of the records already made and obtaining the funds where-with to renew his attempts.

The Bonus and Tax Reduction

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:
An editorial entitled, "The Bonus and Tax Reduction" appeared in the Monitor of Wednesday, Dec. 26, and in this article the following sentences held my attention for quite some time:

attention for quite some time:

If it were a case of meeting the actual needs of veterans of the World War, economy in government would have to yield to the demands of gratitude and justice. But the bonus, as pressed by its political sponsors, is in no sense a provision for the needy only. It contemplates the distribution, among those who suffered not at all equally with those, who suffered cruelly, of lump sums taken from the federal Treasury, which in the main would be spent not in alleviation of distress, but simply for passing pleasures.

The first sentence as quoted would passing pleasures.

As an ex-service man, and one who did not suffer cruelly, but who endured many things and sacrificed many pleasures for those who did not or could not go across the pond, I would like to state some facts which will show why every service man should receive additional compensation for his services to the United States Government.

I would venture to say that most of

Approx per month ......$70

pleasures," it does not seem to me that this should enter into the affair at all. I do not know of anyone who would ask their employees what they are going to do with their wages after they have honestly earned them, and I believe that whether you call the bonus agitation "political" or not, the Government should yield to the demands of

Banking and Wealth Conscription To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor: In your issue of Dec. 3, there appears what purports to be an interview with me regarding the proposal of legalizing the conscription of all wealth and labor, passing pleasures.

The first sentence as quoted would have us believe that gratitude and justice should not be shown to the exservice men unless they were disabled or poverty stricken. The second is somewhat similar, inasmuch as the writer of the article believes that only they who did suffer cyuelly should receive the bonus, as in most cases the money, he says, would be spent for passing pleasures.

As an ex-service man, and one who has an ex-service man, and one who has considered.

Without compensation, in time of war. May I rather bluntly state that I did not say that the big bankers are the real profiteers, that the proposal was a hint at law evasion, or that there is mainly responsible for any urge to war, etc. No person who has worked in the field of money, banking, and forcisin exchange, as I have, would be spent for passing pleasures.

As an ex-service man, and one who

Parks and Bird Preserves

Parks and Bird-Preserves.

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

Since reading many articles in your paper concerning birds, and one particularly concerning an Ohio family which has set aside a few acres as a bird preserve, I have been wondering whether it might not be feasible for each county in the United States and Canada to set aside one square mile of land for a similar purpose, as a war memorial.

Would not an equal distribution of parks like this be much better, and do the country more good, than the present plan of half a dozen large national parks?

An Ancient and a Modern "On the Sublime"

is the power of forming great concep-tions, as we have elsewhere explained is the power of forming great conceptions, as we have eisewhere explained in our remarks on Xenophon. Secondly, there is vehement and inspired passion. These two components of the sublime are for the most part innate. Those which remain are partly the product of art. The due formation of figures deals with two sorts of figures, first those of thought and secondly those of expression. Next there is poble diction, which in turn comprises choice of words, and use of interaction of land the second of the ondly those of expression. Next there is poble diction, which in turn comprises choice of words, and use of metaphors, and elaboration of language. The fifth pause of elevation—one which is the fitting conclusion of all that have preceded it—is dignified and elevated composition." But "the first of the conditions, elevation of careful to distinguish between exaltation and mere rant or bombast.

Another form of spurious expression is that of "unseasonable passion, where no passion is required, or immoderate, where moderation is needed, for men are carried away into displays of emotion which are not caused by the nature of the subject, but are purely personal and wearisome." Such faults, he declares, with startling contemporancity, result from the "pursuit of novelty in the expression of ideas which may be regarded as the fashionable craze of the day."

To offset these misguided efforts which must fail of attainment, we need "first of all, clear knowledge and appreciation of the true sublime." Then we must understand the "five principal sources of elevated language. Beneath these five varieties there lies, as though it were a common foundation, the gift of discourse, which is indispensable. First and most impertant is the power of forming great conceptions, as we have elsewhere explained to the sublet and the direction of the parts; but, fourthly, to have those parts not angular, but melted as it were into each other. Fifthly, to be of a delicate frame, without any remarks on Xenophon. Sec.

The sublime, in his view, manifests the very antithests of these characteristics. Vastness of any kind is the primary requisite; rugged, rough outlines, obscurity and darkness, solitude and silence.—in short, anything which produces the feeling of awe is sublime. His copious and convincing illustrations are drawn both from experience and from literature, especially from and from literature, especially from the Bible, Vergil, and Milton. As an example of hugeness, vastness, and power he cites Milton's description:

In shape and gesture proudly eminent Stood like a tower; his form had yet

Sidney's "Defence of Poesie"

This little book . . . can make its appeal on many grounds—as one of the earliest efforts of literary criticism in the language, as the mirror of an Elizabethan mind, as a piece of harmonious prose; and however it is taken it answers freely to an attentive ear. But perhaps the best manner of taking it now is that which the author expected and asked for—not the manner of an historian, tracing the movement of literature on the eve of Shakeapeare's day (the "Defence" was written before 1583), nor that of an anthologist, looking for pretty extracts, but rather the manner of a critic who agrees with Sidney that "poesie" is an henourable and defensible matter. Sidney wrote as a critic himself, and it is only by reason of an ambiguity of language that we fail to do him justice as a

THE writer of the book of Job was | kind a great service in precisely point-

my redeemer liveth." And, again, so great was his faith in God's mercy. righteousness, and justice, he could exclaim, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." In the light of these and many other evidences of Job's steadfastness and devotion to right, it is altogether logical that the recorder of this fascinating biography should represent God as referring to His faithful devotee as "my servant Job." Few of the ancient worthies seem more deserving of such recognition; none more constant to merit it.

When the many untoward conditions with which Job was confronted are considered, one is justified in the conclusion that a less steadfast mortal would have faltered and perhaps fallen away from his high devotion to God inder such great pressure of adversity. May we not find in this wonderful story ample proof of the rewards God bestows upon the righteous; for in the final chapter of this book we read that the Lord also gave Job "twice as much as he had before"? What better illus. tration could there be of the sure compensation of persistence in the right?

Throughout the centuries men have found great inspiration in this splendid example of evil overcome, and none of its pertinency has been lost. There are few lessons which mankind more greatly needs than the necessity to remain firm in conviction that, in the words of a familiar hymn; "God is on the field when He is most invisible!" What hope may one entertain of gaining God's approval if his devotion waxes and wares in the face of adversities? Should we not remember that God denominated as His servant him who was among the most stable worshipers of whom we have record? Few will doubt that to win God's approval, and thereby to gain salvation, is mankind's great endeavor. Surely God's approval can scarcely be expected by those unwilling to live in accordance with His commands and to do His will. The Scriptures are filled with accounts of the fidelity and steadfastness in devotion of those who have won God's approval. including Christ Jesus himself. One reads in the gospels, with a glow of gratitude, how Jesus was approved by God in the memorable words: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." What greater reward could come to men than to gain such assurence of divine approval?

Christian Science is rendering man-

In this room are little dressmakers who chatter like birds, now and then breaking into song with melody fresh as of the springtime. Hearing them I understand why French dresses have such beautifully made seams. At six o'clock the little coutourleres go home, and the street grows lively any pariey with the Philistine. But any pariey with the Philistine. But Sidney, in the happier spring-time of literary criticism, was full of simple hopes, and he was able to argue more hopefully and more simply than the prudent critic of today. He was also able to write more attractively; turn. after doing justice to his argument, to s few of the famous passages that you remember so well—they are prettler than ever.—Percy Lubbock, in The Nation and-The Athenæum.

In the last analysis, the problem reduces itself to this form Whom will ye serve? And each makes the choice for himself.

"Choose you this day whom ye will serve" is the injunction which all must consider. The servant of good receives the reward of the faithful servant. He who would serve evil can scarcely expect God's approval or divine Love's reward. EMULATING the efforts of the boy who whistles to keep his courage at the proper pitch, the publicity agents who speak in behalf of the organizations formed to work for the nullification or the modification of the prohibition law in the United States are seeking to make it appear that genuine moral support has been given to their unworthy cause. In a recent dispatch, Austen G. Fox, chairman of the board of the "Moderation League," is quoted as saying that labor, law and capital have joined in a nation-wide effort for the modification of the Volstead Act. He cites as the representatives of these three interested parties the American Federation of Labor, the Constitutional Liberty League, the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, and the Moderation League, of which he himself is an officer. Surely if these titles really indicated what Mr. Fox evidently wishes the public to believe they stand for, the alliance would be a strong one. But do they, except somewhat superficially, represent the workers, the law itself generically or as a profession, or the unprejudiced spokesmen for wealth as wealth is represented in industry, in commerce, in finance?

It has been quite convincingly shown, despite the insistence of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, that his organization, although nominally on record as favoring a modification of the Volstead Act, does not, at least in that particular, reflect the true sentiment of Labor in the United States. Technically, of course, Mr. Fox has a right to claim an alliance with organized labor, but the millions of wageearners identified with the Federation of Labor who have allied themselves with the supporters of the law, simply because of their conviction that the law should be enforced for the good of all, cannot be included among the agitators for modification.

It is not made quite clear how Mr. Fox seeks to identify the law, as a profession, with the movement favoring nullification or modification of the constitutional amendment or the enforcement code. He is a lawyer, and evidently one of some prominence. He is a member of the American Bar Association, but that organization has repeatedly gone on record as advocating and supporting a complete observance of this particular law. At the last meeting of the association in Minneapolis, in September, 1923, a special committee on law enforcement submitted a report in which it was charged that the "apathy and indifference of the American people toward law enforcement" are responsible for what is declared to be the increase in the number of crimes and criminals. Mr. Fox, as a member of the American Bar Association, is committed to this view, perhaps more than theoretically. If Mr. Gompers is bound by the declarations of the Federation of Labor, surely Mr. Fox is equally bound by the expressions of the American Bar

That capitalists, as individuals, are aiding the efforts of the nullificationists, cannot be denied. But to seek to make it appear that Capital, as a unit, or as an entity, is committed to the plan, is to deal somewhat extravagantly with patent facts. Capital as represented in the productive industries in the United States has repeatedly confirmed its adherence to the law as it now exists. Capital as represented by the banking industry certainly realizes the benefits of prohibition as reflected in savings deposits and the general thrift of the working classes. As to the Constitutional Liberty League, the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, and the Modification League, they are representative of nothing save the individuals and the interests which are opposed to prohibition. They are not representative of the wealth, the culture, or the prevailing sentiment of the country. Among their members, it is true, are many men who, naturally, might be expected to identify themselves with the advocates of law and order. But their motives are their own and cannot properly be questioned. The main point to be kept clearly in mind, however, is this: These gentlemen, no matter what their social or professional standing, cannot claim, or be claimed, to represent the vital entities which Mr. Fox somewhat carelessly brackets under the inclusive titles of capital, law, and labor.

THE week's developments in the business and industry of the United States were much more conclusive than those, for instance, of the previous week, when holiday influences were still felt in many lines. In most directions these developments were positive, but in a few cases negative. Amongthe positive ones, sure to find ultimate reflection in general conditions, the most important was the flow-back of funds to the financial centers from the interior, in unprecedented volume. This brought a general easing of market rates for money, with new rates of 434 per cent established for time money and 334 per cent for call money, a decline of one-quarter of 1 per cent from the previously established "going rates." Doubtless this plethora of funds at the financial centers was closely interwoven with another positive development—the complete revival of the investment market, and an excellent demand from institutions and private investors for securities of all sorts.

In strictly industrial directions, most of last week's indications were favorable. The automobile show in New York has quite evidently given that industry a good start for another excellent year. Crude and refined oil prices both advanced during the week. The United States Steel Corporation, in its regular report of unfilled tonnage, noted the first increase over the previous year's figures it has been able to note since last March. In such lines as copper, rubber, foodstuffs, leather, chemicals, and agricultural machinery, the forward business placed on the books of leading corporations in the trades exhibits the first definite increase since early fall and compares most favorably with the forward business booked at this time last year. Conditions in the textile industry are not altogether satisfactory because of the high price of the raw material and because of the uncertainty of the attitude toward higher prices for finished materials which consumers will take. There has been some further curtailment of operations in northern mills reported during

It becomes increasingly evident to those who watch these infallible indicators of conditions as they actually exist for signs as to what is to happen in the succeeding few months, that 1924 is not going to be a "boom year," and that such increases in forward business as are to be noted are quite in line with the natural growth of the country, rather than the result of a false speculative demand or the belief that there will not be enough goods "to go around." Last year's experience of an abnormally brisk first quarter, followed by an abnormally dull summer; will be remembered. This is not likely to be duplicated this year, mainly because there is no exhaustion of supplies, as in 1923, and because of the entire absence, in most markets, of speculative trading. Ranged side by side, the factors which will weigh most heavily in the balance for a year of constructive prosperity—on which a good start already has been made—may be enumerated as follows: the fact that it is a presidential year and that tax reduction now appears a certainty; that money is easy; that there is no oversupply either of goods or services, and that a good crop has just been marketed. To be added to this is the constructively active frame of mind with which the country's business, financial and political leaders view conditions of the next few months. There are offsets, of course, to these weights in the balance. The decline of the franc in the last two weeks or so has raised grave doubts, in America's financial districts at least, about the possibility of cur-rency inflation in France. The rise of the Labor Party in England to a position of power is viewed with apprehension in many financial quarters. The increased cost of living in the United States, as measured by the price of necessities, and viewed in connection with a stabilized wage, which has neither declined nor advanced in the last twelve months, may bring new employment difficulties

It is one of the oldest and most ancient proverbs of the Chinese that "most of those things we fear never happen." In this case, it is to be observed that those obstacles to complete financial and business recovery, now classed as weighing in the balance against the constructive developments, are almost all negative in character. They may develop into factors "which are feared," but which

'never happen."

Elections and

Extremists

THE recent elections to India's Central Legislative Assembly and the Provincial Councils have brought scantier successes than they had anticipated to those Oriental Home Rulers who call themselves Swarajist. The policy of this Gandhi-founded organization no longer is the non-cooperation which the incarcerated Mahatma once preached. In place of passive resistance on the outside, the plan now is "boring from inside." Its supporters hoped the penin-sular legislatures would be generally captured by their candidates, elected on platforms of intentionally exaggerated promises. At once, on the assembling of the newly chosen bodies, these promises were to be phrased into bills, and entered and pushed. It was foreseen, of course, that they had not the least present chance to. become law, but exactly there lay the point: just so soon as the "program" failed, a policy of complete obstruction would be adopted, as if in retaliation.

All this was broadly known, and Viceroy Reading, in an address at Simla, referred to it impliedly, yet quite clearly enough to leave no doubt in the minds of his hearers as to what he meant. His warning was, in brief, that "wrecking tactics" would paralyze, not the work of the Government, but the development of the constitutional reforms themselves. There may have been some appreciation of this stirring in the national consciousness, for the balloting brought no sweeping victory, as Swarajist leaders had confidently foretold. These extremists have won about a third of the total representation in the Central Assembly and, on the average, about the same proportion in the Provincial Councils, with the exception of Bengal, where, supported by the Tilak faction, they seem to have had things pretty much their Bengal's Governor, Lord Lytton, promptly made a daring but (as proved by the event) wise move. Accepting the constitutional position thus developed, he invited Mr. C. R. Das, the Swaraj chieftain, to assume responsibility for all that part of the provincial administration which had been "transferred" (that is, reserved as ministerial) under the diarchical system of the Government of India Act. After a period of party discussion, showing clearly that the proposal produced a considerable stir, Mr. Das declined the offer on the ground that he could not accept control under a plan to whose destruction he was pledged. Lord Lytton's hands are strengthened, however, by his open and logical proposal. If now he is compelled to have recourse to the exceptional powers which reside in his office, he will be the more assured of large support from all moderate-minded persons.

The British Raj today is considering the rights and progress of above 300,000,000 people, and not solely those of the perhaps 300,000 in the constituencies whose support has been won by the facile tongues of the Swarajist spokesmen. Therefore, in the obviously trying weeks and months which lie ahead, the Government must pursue a policy labelled "No Undue Precipitancy"-and this despite the abuse certain to be incurred by all moves tending to restrain the voters. As an instance: Complete "dominion status" for the great protectorate is not only conceivable-it is a wholly probable future development. But the due time for such a change must, in very essence, remain indeterminate. Swaraj demands that the step be taken forthwith. "If this is not granted after one more year, we shall proclaim an Indian Republic," shouts Muhammad Ali to the All-India National Congress. Yet to put so immediate an end to executive control, with no further training of the people into whose underexperienced hands that control would pass-well, that would mean an outbreak of disorder such as might set back the clock of full Indian Home Rule for at least a

ONLY a few weeks ago New York was considering the appropriateness of its park as a site for an art gallery;

City Parks

now the question is whether its park is the right place for an elaborate war monument. In both cases a problem is raised which, sooner or later, faces every town with a small park and the right desire for civic dignity and beauty. We have already said what we think of sparing a few acres in a small park for an art gallery. The problem of the war monument is not quite the same. Much depends upon the proposed form for the monument, and certainly to the form proposed for the war monument in Central Park objections can be made. One, stated with eloquent indignation, it will be remembered, is that Mr. Thomas Hastings' design suggests too close a copy, or adaptation, of the monument at Schönbrunn, in Vienna. The critic could, however, have gone to many other places and to earlier and later ages and discovered practically the same model-the not unusual colonnade decorated with sculpture, the formal hedge of trees as a background, the lagoon or lake in front. Whoever has traveled in Europe has come upon something of the kind in more than one garden or park, and it seems as if in a country which has created the skyscraper greater originality should be shown, especially in a monument that is to cost, before it is finished, somewhere about two million dollars. The architect and the sculptors who are to fill the open arches with statues, probably find the plan in every way admirable. It would supply them with a splendid commission and an admirable opportunity. But a more serious objection than the lack of originality is the inappropriateness of the site chosen.

Mr. Hastings himself explains this objection when he says that, while the small park, by which he means the city square, confined in four parallel walls of buildings, should best be treated architecturally, the park whose boundary lines are not all visible should retain its rural aspect, its suggestion of the country, and its restful associations. He would make the proverbial exception, however, in the case of Central Park, and thus give the wrong example to many American towns with parks no larger, where elaborate architectural ornament would produce the effect of those formal gardens which, beautiful as they are, do not provide just the rest and refreshment and natural beauty rightly recognized as the chief end of a city park. We know how, after a surfeit of landscape gardening, one turns with a feeling of repose to the quiet cottage garden, with its old-fashioned flowers and simple flower beds. So in the city park repose should be sought and found after the city streets and squares. Even in London, with its endless open spaces, this is realized, and it is at the entrance to a park, rather than breaking in upon its peaceful meadows and shady groves, that the monumental arch is placed.

Editorial Notes

WHEN it comes to grasping the full significance of the distance, half a dozen ciphers or so make very little difference to the 6,000,000,000,000,000 miles which separate this earth from the latest universe of stars to be discovered and measured. Light, we are told, takes a paltry million years to reach the earth therefrom-and light, it may be remembered, travels at the insignificant speed of 186,000 miles a second. Also, so far as is known, this newly found universe is the most distant object ever seen by the eye of man. Such discoveries serve to emphasize the sentiment expressed years ago by Isaac Watts:

Were I so tall to reach the pole, Or grasp the ocean with my span, I must be measured by my soul: The mind's the standard of the man.

Two outstanding facts face the trustees of the Crystal Palace, London: one is that the great hall space, which for four years has been occupied by the Imperial War Museum exhibits, will soon again be available, and the other is that the rent of £25,000 a year which has been paid by the Government for housing them is about to cease. It is proposed to use a part of the balance of about £80,000, at present on hand, in refurnishing some of the famous courts which were a feature of the palace before the war, in renovating and improving the lower parts of the grounds and in restoring the figures of antediluvian animals which they contain. And a wiser. use of the funds would, most people will agree, be difficult to conceive.

WHAT Dean Greenough of Harvard has characterized as "intellectual bootlegging," namely, the practice of "getting by" through the agency of the notes of some companion, is not, unfortunately, confined to that university alone. "If a person masquerading as John Smith should go down to Soldiers Field and play football, and John Smith should claim credit for his achievements, he would be severely condemned by the undergraduate body," Mr. Greenough declared recently, adding: "Yet such an act is no more fraudulent than passing an examination by means of another's work." Somehow it is just a matter of putting the issue squarely before people, for very few when faced by such a statement would deliberately defy all that is therein involved,

An Occidental at a Chinese Play

A FLIGHT of steep stairs leading up from a narrow street, a box office fashioned, with engaging simplicity, from a bit of shelving and two uprights, a half dozen Chinese to scrutinize the arriving audience and make change from a box spilling forth bills and silver, these are the approaches to the Chinese theater in Boston. That is to say, they are the outward symbols of approach. Intrinsically, there probably is no approach for the Occidental; for everywhere there are subtle reminders that it is, in the thoughts of the managers, a Chinese theater purely for the Chinese. Occidentals are extra audience.

My laundry man, in a lengthy and largely unintelligible dissertation delivered the other day to me, assured me that ten years ago the tradition of centuries in the Chinese theater which permitted no actresses, but always compelled men to make the feminine characterizations, was upset-that since that time there have been women in the companies. He elaborated the means by which such a circumstance came about, but I am unable to report it. In response to a suggestion that Americans, as a rule, did not attend this theater in Boston, he shrugged his shoulders with considerable meaning and stated severely that Americans did not know "good theater."

The performance each evening is five hours long. It takes place in a long, shallow room with the audience separated from the stage and its players by only a foot or so. There is no raising or lowering of the curtain and no lessening of the orchestral accompaniment. It may not, seeking to dispose with descriptive speed of the fullness of the performance, be too much to employ the rather spirited assurance of the circus barker's phrase, "Scmething doing all the time." There is, indeed. The property man is busy, sliding in and out among the players, hanging blue-charactered cards on chairs to indicate their relation to the scene, moving two chairs together and flinging a glowing, gold-dragoned strip of silk over them to make them a couch, inserting uprights of bamboo into sockets on chair backs to hold canopies, to make them something else. His only properties seem to be silks and chairs.

It comes to be surprising how many utilities can be fashioned out of the manipulation of such a paucity of material. Moreover, the property man's sole office is not the moving of furniture and the dexterous handling of silks. He is a humorous individual. His influence is brought to bear on the players by means of sundry whispered quips of his own devising, which he delivers as he moves about among them with smiles and mischievous gestures. His name may not appear in the flimsy, pale-lettered program, but he is important to the production and has no doubt of it.

The play goes on and on and on. The flute voices of the two or three women describe a constant metallic arc across the deeper tones of the men. Jewels glimmer and flash in towering headdresses. An ancient person with a snowy beard reaching nearly to his feet moves about, holding his head stiffly, that the pheasant's feathers flowing from the back of his cap to the hem of his vermilion robes may not lose their grace of line. The somber garments of the mother-in-law-that fascinating figure, constantly present in the Chinese theater-belie the majestic potency of her position in the domestic scheme. The slim, dreamy aristocrat—equally important in the pattern of drama-in his garments of ivory satin, with heavily plumaged birds of fabled beauty dragging splendid tails across them, steps haughtily about, his hands like pallid lilies weaving in and out in gestures which evidently have enormous significance in the technique of the Oriental drama. And, as background, so rich, even though so simply contrived, opulent banners and hangings of luminous silks, etched with unforgetable fir trees, or legendary figures, or gold-scaled dragons.

The Chinese theater could not be but for its orchestra. A shattering summation this, of all the astounding sounds known to Chinese music. Drums which must have been devised for drum-talk in the far distant hills of Tibet. Marvelously shaped instruments that give out a thin wail, occasionally fibrous with beauty; a slim reed or two; a huge, discolored lump of brass summarily assaulted at intervals of fifteen seconds with a short club. The latter detail, it has been gathered, in a graphic moment spent with a young Chinese who would explain, is the means whereby emphasis in the Chinese theater is laid upon humor.

What is the play about? Everything, apparently, "in heaven and earth and under the sea." Persons of high and low degree, in rags and satins. It is a rich and spicy fare, and Occidentals cannot hope to understand it. But, once seen, it is impossible not to desire to see again. Which cannot always be said for the American theater.

The Obscure Librarian

Of ALL the professional classes, the librarians, declares W. N. C. Carleton in the Bookman, are the most inconspicuous. "Not one person in a million," he declares, "can name the heads of the three largest libraries in the United States. America has at least six institutions, each possessing over a million volumes, whose successful administration requires talent of the biggest 'big business' order, but the names of their librarians are almost unknown, save in library circles." There was, however, a golden age of librarianship which this writer declares "lies far back in antiquity, when librarians, as guardians and interpreters of sacred books and official records. ranked with high priests and great officers of state. In ancient Egypt they frequently attained posts of the highest distinction; several were prime ministers, and one even became a king. Amusing as it seems now, the Egyptian librarians were often the companions and confidants of royalty, and second only to kings and gods in the respect, rank, and honors accorded them. And yet, many a modern multimillionaire might profit by the daily companionship of a high-minded, genial man of books,'

Confusing the World Court Issue

OPPOSITION to the Permanent Court of International Justice is finding vent in a sudden affection for the Hague Tribunal. Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, for instance, believes that the Hague Tribural can accomplish all that is expected from the World Court, and without the League connections, which he feats in the latter. But, according to the Outlook, the purposes of the two are very different. "The purpose of the arbitral tribunal," says the Outlook, "is to arrive at a compromise. The purpose of a court of justice is to administer the law. The Hague Tribunal undertakes to comromise differences, not to settle principles and applications of law. A permanent court of international justice can no more be a product of the evolution of the Hague Tribunal, than a magistrate's court could be the product of a ward caucus. The development of the Hague Tribunal will not lead to a court of justice and is not a substitute for it. If we do not adhere to the Permanent Court of International Justice; it is not likely that we shall adhere to any world court of justice at all."
